Editor’s Note: The following article is reprinted (with updated format editions) from The Journal of Volunteer Administration, 1991, 9(3), pp. 42-44

Tough Choices:
The Challenge of Leadership in the 90's

Judith V. Waymire
[Editor’s Note: no contact information available]

(Editor Generated) Abstract

The author addresses the critical issue of ethical decision making for professional managers of volunteer resources as affected by self-esteem; ethical reasoning; and roles, status, and structures. A framework for ethical decision-making is presented.

Key words: ethics, values, professionalism, leadership

You supervise 15 volunteers in your very busy, understaffed office. Mrs. Gibson is your most valuable volunteer. She is organized, works long hours, fulfills her responsibilities in nearly every way, and has potential for a more responsible position. However, she undermines morale by disparaging other volunteers' work and then threatens to leave unless you put forward her name as board president. What do you do?

Factors in choosing often make "right" and "wrong" less than perfectly clear. Making choices is even harder when you're a volunteer administrator, because you're not just making personal choices but choices that affect volunteers, staff, stakeholders, and constituents.

What affects the choices we make?

Self esteem is one of the factors in choosing. How do we feel about ourselves? Do we "give in" to gain acceptance by the group or "stand firm" even when we're standing alone?

Ethical reasoning involves several other types of choices.

1. Legalities vs. compassion
2. Set beliefs vs. situation-driven
3. Results of actions vs. intentions

Roles, status, and structures all compete as we try to make rational choices. By recognizing the various pressures, we can make choices more reflectively, more self-consciously, and more consistently.

1. The roles we play (Director of Volunteer Services, treasurer of our club, daughter, friend, mother, etc.) all carry behavioral expectations. An administrator needs to be equitable, a daughter needs to be loyal to family, a treasurer needs to be honest, etc.

2. Roles may often be in conflict with the status we have acquired. Can you be a sympathetic friend and collect dues? Can you be a compassionate mother and a disciplinarian?

3. The social structures in which we work (office, tennis team, church, family, etc.) also suggest norms for behavior which may conflict with our personal norms. Do I play office politics to get a promotion? Can I work for a health organization and be a smoker? Can I be an aggressive fundraiser for the church?

Figure 1. Leadership Value Progression.

ETHICS

INTEGRITY

BASIC MORAL VALUES

Basic moral values (see Figure 1) are at the core of leadership. For the most part, effective leaders have a solid moral foundation, a sense of right and wrong and what is important. Effective leadership, especially for a volunteer administrator, springs from a commitment to personal values, such as straightforwardness, truthfulness, honesty, respect for others, and justice. At the heart of all behavior are personal values, deep-rooted principles which impact our choices, behaviors, and attitudes. By examining our values, we become more sensitive to why we make the choices that we do.

Integrity is the cement which holds personal values together. It is the behavior consistent with those values. An individual must act by principle rather than expedience. A leader can only maintain trust if decisions are consistent and predictable. It is devotion to what is right and just. This means that I will do exactly what I say I will do. Integrity does not allow for compromise.

Ethics are personal values translated into action. They are the norms that govern behavior in a group. Leaders are responsible for establishing and maintaining the code of ethics in a group by their own actions, by reinforcing appropriate behaviors and communicating their positions to others.

One of the major tasks of a volunteer administrator is to examine this value base, discard values left from history if they aren't appropriate, and take ownership of values that work. This, in turn, helps us develop a clearer understanding of our behavior so that we can better control our lives.

You know you're in a tough choice dilemma when your stomach gets tied in knots and you say, "Help, what should I do here?" An ethical dilemma often tugs between "wants" and "duties."

Framework for Ethical Decision-Making

Ask yourself these questions:
1. What is the dilemma?
2. What are the facts here?
3. What values are apparent in this situation?
4. Which values do I wish to advance here?
5. What are the alternative courses of action/options?
6. What are the consequences, risks, implications of each option?
7. What is my decision?

Then answer these bottom-line considerations:
1. Ultimately, I have to take responsibility for what I do or don't do.
2. Can I live with this decision?
3. Is my action ultimately doing more good than harm?
4. How is my decision affecting the "stakeholders" in this situation?
5. Am I using excuses to justify my behavior?
6. Would I be proud to have my decision placed in headline news?
7. Am I practicing the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you"?

Personal values affect our choices but, as leaders, we also need to be especially aware of the concept of sustaining values. Sustaining values are those principles which are more universal in scope and are critical to maintaining a just society. Sustaining values keep our world sane and healthy and are at the opposite end of the continuum from self-interest values (see Figure 2). While self-centered values have a "me" orientation, sustaining values have a "human good" orientation.

A belief in sustaining values suggests that there is a community "out there" that needs attention. As leaders, the concept of sustaining values is especially important because leaders are presumably obligated to have a positive effect in building a community—whether that be local, national, or global. John Gardner, noted leadership expert, goes so far as to say that building community is the most essential skill a leader can command.

Sustaining values do not negate personal values and individualism. They simply represent an orientation toward the human good rather than toward total self-interest.

The keys to ethical decision-making are an understanding of your own personal values, an ethical framework for making decisions, a sensitivity to sustaining values necessary to maintain a just society and an integrity in your own actions.

---

Figure 2. Value Continuum.

```
SELF-INTEREST VALUES                   SUSTAINING VALUES
ME" ORIENTATION                          "HUMAN GOOD" ORIENTATION
```

---

About the Author

Judith V. Waymire was educated in Ohio and Indiana and was a full time volunteer until 1984 when she took her first paid position as Special Events Coordinator with the Volunteer Centre of Metro Toronto, Ontario, Canada. She held the position of Director of Regional Services with the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario. More recently she was with the Canadian Hearing Society Foundation as Managing Director. As an advocate of volunteer management, Ms. Waymire gives workshops on volunteer recruitment, training and orientation, and recognition. She has published numerous articles and handbooks for leadership development for youth.